

Rialto is a development on the Quayside managed by The Adderstone Group.

Quality residences on the Quayside

"We have managed to retain many of the original features... whilst providing contemporary living accommodation for today's young professionals"

- The Adderstone Group's associate director, Sean Damer

Jewson-based developer, The Adderstone Group, has just completed the re-development of the 117-year-old Gateshead Railway Club on Hudson Street near the High Level Bridge into 25 luxury apartments.

As part of this scheme, Adderstone has provided a ground floor bar for the club, whose members have served Gateshead for more than 152 years. This development has been renamed Worsdell House after the Worsdell family who were British locomotive engineers on the North Eastern Railway.

Sean Damer, Adderstone Group associate director, said: "We are delighted to have played a part in the opening of the next chapter in the history of this fascinating building.

"We have worked very closely with Gateshead Council on conservation issues as well as with committee members of the club, they are talk with a facility that is worthy of their heritage.

"We have managed to retain many of the original features and brickwork of this historic building whilst providing contemporary living accommodation for today's young professionals."

Worsdell House is in a conservation area, situated at the southern end of the Tyne Bridge with walkways into Newcastle city centre and it is very close to the bustling Quayside.

The Quayside itself has attracted worldwide attention for its regeneration over the last few years.

It now represents one of the most desirable areas to live and work in the North East and as the Newcastle side reaches its full development, attention has been turning to the south side of the river. Crain patistudios and one, two and three bedroom apartments are currently available to let at Worsdell House where rents start at £400 per month.
